PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

The type of experiences a person has determines the attitudes, values and point of view he develops. If his experiences with people are pleasant ones in which his personality is respected, he comes to believe in the worth of personality and to be concerned about the feelings of others. The teacher and principal build good human relations or hinders them by the way they treat students.

Good human relations cannot be obtained by demanding or requesting them. They are built by living and working with students in such a way that they can practice good human relations too. A principal and teacher should exhibit a belief for the wishes and feelings of others, the will to see that all live and work in harmony, plus skill in working with individuals and groups in such a way that these ends are promoted.

The end product should be "self-esteem", a fundamental need of man. Perceptions of self-worth affects one's level of achievement, ability to adjust to the demands of his environment and his general state of well being.

VICE PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

The youth of today is indebted to their parents and forefathers for the tremendous effort exerted by those who accepted the challenge to develop the resources of this land and to open it for settlement. When one considers their accomplishments, keeping in mind that they persevered with only limited technological assistance, one cannot help but conclude that theirs was a heroic effort.

As you enjoy the benefits of today's industrial society, keep in mind the obligations and responsibilities that come with those pleasures.

Future generations will look back on your age and assess your efforts in planning for the future. They will hope that you were constructive and purposeful. Among the challenges facing the youth of today, who will become tomorrow's leaders, are: the management of renewable and depleting resources, the development of alternate forms of energy as conventional sources are exhausted, the provision of adequate food supplies, the coping with ever increasing numbers of people and their physical and emotional needs, and finally evolving acceptable social controls to provide for stability in society as social conflicts, wars and change challenge mankind.

Preparing yourselves well for the tasks ahead of you is both important and rewarding. Future generations will judge your efforts and accomplishments.
